Three to see: New York

From Gainsborough's friendly cows to Giacometti's depictions of people

Revel in the technique and materiality of the New York-based artist Ursula von Rydingsvard's work at her Galerie Lelong solo show, TORN (until 23 June). Her massive, abstract sculptures in cedar with a subtle graphite patina have heavily worked, cave-like holes and craggy surfaces, but also reveal the lines of the studs piled together to make them. Cast from a similar cedar model and standing in its own small, darkened space is a freestanding resin sculpture, lit from within and glowing a dark ocean blue, which has an almost tornado-like narrow funnelled shape and stormy energy. The exhibition also displays a recent series of drawings, Kasia (2016), in silk, distressed Merino wool and pigment on handmade linen paper, which von Rydingsvard created at the Brooklyn paper-making studio Dieu Donné. A beautifully rough, gestural quality unites these works in varying media, which also includes a large bronze cast from another cedar model.
